UW names population health building after Swedish physician and ‘very serious possibilist’ Hans Rosling

Submitted by Gregory R Pflaumer on October 11, 2019 - 11:19am

Hans Rosling — a Swedish doctor, statistician, author and professor — will be a name associated with the University of Washington's transformative work in population health. Today, the UW Board of Regents approved naming the $230 million building under construction on UW's Seattle campus the Hans Rosling Center for Population Health.

Check out the full article on UW News to find out more about Hans Rosling, his work, and the new Hans Rosling Center.
